A LOOK BACK: HORSE MESA DAM

In May 1926, work crews began pouring concrete at Horse Mesa Dam. Horse Mesa was one of three dams constructed on the lower Salt River during the 1920s as part of a plan developed by Charles C. Cragin, General Superintendent of the Salt River Valley Water Users’ Association. These dams were intended not only to increase the Association’s water storage capacity, but also to expand its ability to generate hydroelectric power.

Horse Mesa’s hydroelectric generating units were producing power before the dam was even officially completed in the fall of 1927, helping to offset construction costs. This electricity powered mining operations around the Globe-Miami area of Arizona. Today, Horse Mesa Dam continues to provide clean hydroelectric power and water storage capacity for SRP customers.
